

Omani Minister of Foreign Affairs: "The City of Rawabi is a Miracle, it's Like the Pyramids"

Rawabi's 5th Neighborhood "Ikshaf": New Floorplans, Sizes and Breathtaking Views

Forbes Holds its Annual Conference at Rawabi

Here at Rawabi, we are moving with certainty towards a bright future. Together, we dreamed of what was possible and together, we built it. The city is coming alive as families go about the daily business of work, school and home life. Q Center hums with activity as employees arrive each day fresh and eager to create, to produce, and innovate in the city's expanding business hub. By night, the lights of Rawabi's cafes, restaurants and shops sparkle as the sounds of relaxed conversations and laughter spill out onto the sidewalks. When the weekend comes, young and old come out to enjoy the warm weather and outdoor activities found in our breathtaking natural setting at WaDina.

One of the sights that makes me most proud is young students heading into Rawabi English Academy. The city's first school opened its doors in September 2016 and rapidly grew to become one of Palestine's premiere education facilities. Perhaps more than any other accomplishment we've shared, the success of our school assures me we are on the right track and that there is no obstacle we cannot surmount.

When I walk around the city today, so much of what I see reinforces my conviction that the gains we have made here are permanent – that we have built something no one will ever be able to take away from us. I watch our workers arrive daily to continue to build Rawabi neighborhoods, and I know in my heart that those steady paychecks are feeding and housing thousands of Palestinian families. I see a young couple shopping and pushing a child in a stroller in the pedestrian area of Q Center, and I know we are collectively making great strides towards improving our quality of life. I pass two young businesswomen confidently chatting about work in a café during lunch hour and know that gender equality is closer today for us in Palestine than it was yesterday.

As summer approaches, I personally look forward to enjoying concerts in the WaDina amphitheater. It's a chance for me to enjoy, along with thousands of my fellow Palestinians, an evening's respite and the pleasure of song and entertainment. These evenings, these moments, restore us and strengthen my belief that in the words of the immortal Mahmoud Darwish, "What we have on this earth makes life worth living."

Come and experience with us all that Rawabi has become. And is yet to be.

Bashar Masri

Rawabi city was built upon an initiative and under the leadership of Bashar Masri through a strategic partnership between Massar International and Qatar. The city is built on a strategic location north of Jerusalem in a region near Ramallah; it is located on hills overlooking the Mediterranean Sea from the west. Rawabi was constructed as part of the first integrated zoning and planning scheme of modern times, and with a modern urban vision and sustainable environmental practices on an area of 6,300,000 square meters amid a magnificent Palestinian landscape.

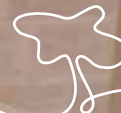

The first phase of Rawabi consists of 5,000 housing units, of which more than 1,000 apartments are ready to be lived in. The city will expand to 22 residential neighborhoods with a vast array of housing unit designs. In its first phase, the city will accommodate more than 25,000 people; upon completion, it will house more than 40,000 persons. The city's modern residential quarters embrace Palestinian social and cultural uniqueness and architectural heritage. The city will include vital facilities such as a modern multi-purpose mall for shopping and trade, a business ventures incubator equipped with the latest international technology to lead businesses and creative innovations, in addition to health centers and places for worship. The city launched Rawabi English Academy, to be followed in the future with a multi-resources educational and academic complex. An outdoor Roman-style amphitheater has recently hosted an audience of around 15,000 people. Exceptional entertainment facilities have been added so far, including the equestrian club, challenging high-adrenalin games, parks and green areas.

Omani Minister of Foreign Affairs Compares Construction of Rawabi to the Feat of the Pyramids

Oman's Foreign Minister Yusuf bin Alawi kindly compared the enormity of the task of building the city of Rawabi to building the pyramids. The minister stated.

“The city of Rawabi is a modern-day miracle. It's not an overstatement to see the same human drive here as you saw with the building of the pyramids in ancient times. To build with such precision on mountainous terrain is a statement of strength and a will to communicate long-term stability.”

The formal diplomatic delegation from the Sultanate of Oman included the foreign minister, high-ranking ministry officials, ambassadors and other members of the Omani diplomatic corps. The Omani delegation was officially received at Rawabi by Palestinian government representatives, business leaders and city founder Bashar Masri. The tour included the public infrastructure of the new city as well as a presentation of the master plan and construction slated for future phases. The delegation expressed admiration for the rapid pace of progress in evidence and the city's diverse population demographic. Also discussed were the many challenges the city faced and continues to face during its development. “Palestine symbolizes for us knowledge, struggle and the desire for life. It is my belief that Rawabi is a feat only the Palestinian people could accomplish,” bin Alawi stated. Major General Jibril Rajoub, Fatah Central Committee Member and Chairman of the Palestinian Football Association and the Palestinian Olympic Committee, affirmed Rawabi as a form of peaceful resistance to the occupation. “This city reminds the world that the Palestinian people will stand fast on their land,” Rajoub commented. City founder Masri welcomed the delegation and stressed on the importance of strengthened cooperation with Oman and all Arab nations, highlighting the very important role played by the State of Qatar in Rawabi's construction. Masri further affirmed the importance of global outreach and knowledge exchange to speed the pace of economic development throughout the Arab World.

Ramallah Northern Entrance Connecting with Rawabi Reopened after 15 Years of Closure

After years of petitioning from the Rawabi and Birzeit municipalities and the Ministry of Public Works and Housing, the northern access road to Ramallah connecting with Rawabi has been repaved and is now open to traffic.

Eng. Mousa Jadallah, General Director of Public Works and Housing in Ramallah and Al-Bireh, said "Reopening this road greatly facilitates traffic flow, particularly since it connects the areas in the north of the West Bank with the Ramallah district. Tens of thousands of vehicles travel this road on a daily basis." He also added, "Reopening this road enforces Palestinian sovereignty in the region and reduces the chronic delays caused by checkpoints." Rawabi Mayor Ibrahim Al-Natour commented the road opening greatly improves quality of life for citizens not only of Rawabi, but all over the West Bank. He stated, "One of the primary responsibilities of a municipal council is to ensure that citizens are being served to the greatest degree possible. The ability to bypass the Atara checkpoint greatly reduces stress and saves time on the daily commute for many thousands of Palestinians. We hope to make many more such positive changes in the lives of our citizens going forward." Birzeit Mayor Dr. Johar Sayej commented on the positive implications for reopening the road on the national economy. "Rawabi and Birzeit are in many ways like Siamese twins with multiple points of connection between the two populations. Lack of direct road access had been extremely problematic as roads are the lifeline of a thriving economy. Reopening this road is going to have far-reaching impacts not just on the two towns it directly connects, but on the entire national economy."

In Their Words: Quotes from Rawabi Life

It is the perfect platform for entrepreneurs and start up owners to meet and exchange knowledge, for it is growing and one day it will compete on local and international levels. The number of those who are joining us and are becoming family members is increasing, which makes me proud of what we are doing”.

Sari Taha – Rawabi Tech Hub, and Rawabi Resident

“One of the best things that had happened to me was that before I graduated I joined the training program of “Massarak” in Rawabi. Today I work and live in this city. We work hard to keep Rawabi clean. I can't deny that this is a huge responsibility, especially that I take care of the Q Center courtyard and its facilities. But the results are very satisfactory as our guests now have developed a sense of responsibility not to throw anything on the grounds.

Mohammad – Cleaning Staff at Q Center

"We at the Homeowners Association always feel the responsibility to sustain and preserve the streets and neighborhoods of Rawabi and to respond to the needs of its residents. 55 Students from the Department of Architecture at Al-Quds University Participate in Church Design Competition

As part of its education outreach program, as well as the Massarak Training and Internship Program, Bayti Real Estate Investment Company, the developer of Rawabi, seeks to engage Palestinian university students from varied academic disciplines in projects that allow them to apply theoretical knowledge in a hands-on experience. Building on these efforts, and as a part of its partnership with Al-Quds University's Faculty of Engineering, Bayti invited the architecture students to participate in a contest to design Rawabi's first church.

The competition lasted for an entire school semester, where discussion panels were held on weekly basis. The panels deliberated on the students' projects and ideas. The students also participated in lectures on the history of architecture especially for places of worship, with a focus on churches and cathedrals.

Seventeen student projects were shortlisted to the final stage, where they presented their designs to the judging panel consisting of the Head of the Department of Architecture Dr. Yara Saifi, Dr. Maha Samman, Dr. Omar Yousef, Dr. Husni Qart, Eng. Ihab Al-Afandi, Eng. Amal Abu-Ghush, in addition to engineers and representatives from Bayti. The judges announced three winners during the competition's closing ceremony, with the attendance of the University's Vice President Dr. Safa Nasseraldin, as well as The Dean of the Faculty of Engineering Dr. Abdul Aziz Al-Qintar.

During the ceremony, Dr. Saifi thanked the representatives from Rawabi for their efforts, and affirmed that the students' participation in the design competition was an ideal opportunity to apply what they are learning in the classroom to an actual project that is going to be built in Palestine.

On his part, Dr. Al-Qintar expressed his delight and appreciation of Rawabi's efforts to engage the students in such a project, noting the motivation and positive impacts it has on students and teachers alike. Dr. Al-Qintar stressed that such cooperative projects help integrate the students with the local community, and help them display their skills and qualifications.

On the other hand, Bayti representatives congratulated the students on their submissions, noting the impressive talent and level of precision they observed in these projects. Moreover, the representatives reaffirmed Bayti's commitment to continue its partnership with Al-Quds University through various avenues – from the Massarak co-op and internship program, to the dual-studies programs, and many more to come.

Hiba Shuaibat won first place, while Wael Shaheen received second, and Abdul Rahman Rabie received third. The winners received certificates as well as cash prizes and gift cards to retail stores at Q Center.

Before kicking-off the competition the students had already toured Rawabi and the nearby area. The tour began in Birzeit at the Latin Patriarchate's Church of the Virgin Mary, and meeting Father Louis Hazboun, parish priest, Ph.D. holder and lecturer in Archaeology at Bethlehem University. Hazboun lectured on fundamentals of church design and the building's function as central to the community and spiritual life of its parishioners.

At Rawabi, Al-Quds students and faculty members toured the city with engineers to explore the architectural features of the city, a blending of modern function with traditional and heritage elements. The students and engineers engaged in lively discussions about design theory and master planning.

A large audience gathered at Rawabi to hear Ma'an News Agency chief editor Dr. Nasser Laham lecture on the future of the two-state solution. Dr. Laham's seminar, "Is a Two-State Solution Still Viable? And What Does 'One-State' Mean?" was held in Cinema Hall at Q Center. Participants traveled from Jerusalem and all over the West Bank to hear Dr. Laham's presentation. Dr. Laham focused on the semantics of the words "state" and "homeland". He offered a number of historic and geographic references as evidence that many states have been absorbed into other states ("one-state solution") while still retaining their language, culture and more importantly, their "homeland". He reassured the gathered participants, "Don't worry. Whether we have one state or two states doesn't matter. This land, Palestine, will always be the homeland of the Palestinian people." Dr. Laham went on to say, "I remember a time during the first intifada when it was a crime to fly the Palestinian flag. To come to Rawabi and be greeted by the magnificent flag flying from the top of the hill, thumbing its nose at the settlers while waving a greeting to visitors from all over the world is a testament to the truth of my words." He also commented that Rawabi's architecture continually reminds visitors they are in Palestine, and the names of Q Center's gates reaffirm its Palestinian heritage as well. Dr. Laham was accompanied on this visit to Rawabi by Ma'an News Agency director Mohammad Farraj. Farraj commented on the speed with which the city was constructed in spite of the obstacles imposed by the occupation. He further noted that as a news agency, Ma'an is interested in the city as a catalyst to the Palestinian economy as well as a generator of employment opportunities for so many Palestinians.

Rawabi founder Bashar Masri welcomed Dr. Laham and Farraj and thanked them for their valuable contributions to society through accurate reporting at Ma'an and also for their role as independent journalists. "A free press and freedom of speech are fundamental to a Palestinian state," said Masri. "When young people believe the news is accurate and unbiased and all opinions may be voiced freely in public forums, it lays the foundations of trust needed for good governance. Ma'an's reputation for integrity has played a very important role in this regard."

Zafer Melhem, Head of Palestinian Energy Authority, Visits Rawabi "Rawabi's Self-Sufficiency is Admirable"

A delegation headed by Zafer Melhem, head of the Palestinian Energy Authority, visited the city of Rawabi to assess progress. The delegation met with Bashar Masri and toured the city's facilities and power infrastructure. Melhem expressed his admiration at the city's service delivery to its citizenry and commended the magnitude of its job creation.

Melhem commented on the details that most impressed him in the city, including how well cared for the city's neighborhoods appeared, the stone facades of the buildings cut from the Rawabi hills, the city's industrial zone as well as its wastewater treatment plant. Melhem was particularly pleased with the city's focus on renewable energy sources and sustainability.

Melhem discussed with Masri a major renewable energy project underway with the Palestine Real Estate Investment Company (PRICO) recently launched in Gaza that will provide 24-hour electricity to its industrial zone. The PRICO project hopes to reduce operating costs for factories and create 800 direct and indirect new employment opportunities.

Masri stated that PADICO, the parent company of PRICO, is completely committed to its obligations to the companies and people of Gaza. He noted that the PRICO project budget is $11.7 million and will produce approximately 7 megawatts of power, sufficient to run 32 factories at once, a significant leap forward for the Gaza economy.

Masri welcomed the Melhem's visit and thanked him for the cooperation of the energy authority in the PRICO project and at Rawabi. Masri noted that the rising workforce of young Palestinians will be instrumental in making innovation and forward progress a reality.

The minister stressed the need for inter-municipal cooperation in the implementation of the Ministry's strategic plan to connect Ramallah to the northern areas of the West Bank.

The municipal representatives agreed that the work of constructing and paving the Ramallah-Salfeet road would be divided into two phases. Phase one consists of 11 kilometers from Abu Qash through Birzeit to Rawabi. Phase one requires 3 kilometers to pass through Area C. Phase two consists of 10 kilometers from Rawabi to Salfeet through the village of Abwein.

Neighborhood Tree Planting in Rawabi

To continue efforts to build Rawabi as a green city in every sense of the word, hundreds of trees were planted over the course of a week in a series of special events organized by the municipality. Homeowners Associations (HOA) representatives, members of the Municipal Council and many residents joined in the tree-planting effort. Mayor Al-Natour launched the effort with the planting of the first tree, which was followed by a brief symposium on trees in the natural landscape and their many benefits.

Children participating in the event enjoyed a day out of doors while volunteering in service of their community. Several commented that the tree-planting activities increased their feeling of connection to the land.

Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government Announces Rawabi Fellowship for Palestinian Students

Harvard's Kennedy School of Government (HKS) in conjunction with the city of Rawabi announced the creation of the Rawabi fellowship to support the matriculation of academically qualified Palestinian students to its post-graduate programs.

The fellowship is partially endowed by a grant from Rawabi founder Bashar Masri. It covers the cost of annual tuition, health insurance and a monthly stipend for Palestinian students who gain admittance to full-time graduate programs as well as financial support for Palestinian students in the HKS executive education programs.

The new fellowship falls under the auspices of the HKS Middle East Initiative at the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs. The Middle East Initiative will provide academic guidance to enrolled Palestinian students, organize relevant public policy events and help manage transportation and logistics for students during their time at HKS. The objective is to develop a strong network to include students, researchers and faculty with a shared interest in Middle East affairs. Over the long term, this network also hopes to leverage knowledge and create opportunities for its members in their careers and in their communities.

"The Palestinian people face difficult challenges in public policy which requires having skilled and committed leaders to address them," said Dean Douglas W. Elmendorf and Professor of Public Policy Don K. Price. "This scholarship will inspire future generations of leaders to contribute to the political, social and economic development of the region," they added.

Bashar Masri discussed his decision to endow the fellowship. "HKS, in my experience, offers programs that attract students and faculty of wide-ranging backgrounds who uniquely understand the importance of a well-educated leadership. Positive change, forward progress and ultimately, peace - in Palestine and elsewhere - will be the work of leaders who have earned their positions through knowledge and experience."

Tarek Masoud, HKS Sultan of Oman Professor of International Relations, added "We believe the Rawabi fellowship program will attract academically talented Palestinian students to HKS, which will help to develop their potential to become leaders, thinkers and policy makers."

Background on HKS:

HKS aims to improve public policy and public leadership in the United States and the world through research, education and directly working with public decision makers and leaders. The nearly 20,000 post-graduates and 50,000 executive education graduates of HKS now work in almost every country in the world. HKS faculty, staff and students are keen on implementing programs that improve knowledge and promote public policy and leadership in dozens of countries. The skills and capacities of the HKS community are devoted to help make peoples' lives around the world more secure, free and prosperous.

Lord Mayor of London, Alderman Charles Bowman, Visits Rawabi "Rawabi's Young Work Force is One of Its Strengths"

Alderman Charles Bowman, Lord Mayor of the City of London, together with British Consul General Philip Hall toured Rawabi recently with an accompanying VIP delegation. The Lord Mayor and the Consul General were greeted and accompanied by Rawabi mayor Ibrahim Al-Natour and city founder, Bashar Masri.

The Lord Mayor serves as commercial liaison for the City of London and its business interests. Bowman expressed his surprise at the size of Rawabi's Q Center and how quickly it had managed to attract a significant business presence, given the conflict that plagues the region. He observed cities facing no such obstacles sometimes take longer to reach "critical mass" than Rawabi appears to have taken.

Bowman also noted the majority of Rawabi's employees are young men and women who will build careers alongside the city's own growth. "A youthful workforce brings vitality to the workplace and fosters a culture of innovation and best practice," Bowman observed.

In conversation with Mayor Al-Natour, Bowman commented that municipal councils are very effective in strengthening relations with counterparts in cities across the world. He also noted that a municipal council's primary role is to serve the needs of city residents, and that good municipal governance guarantees equal rights for all.

Bashar Masri expressed his gratitude to the Lord Mayor and Consul General for their visit. "Based on what you've seen here, I hope you feel, as we do, that Rawabi is a testament to our ability to build an independent Palestinian state. We will continue to strive to the best of our ability to expand our facilities and infrastructure sustainably as the city grows. A decade from now, I hope you return to find our new city 3 times the size it is now - and delivering quality of life to Palestinians just as efficiently as we are today."

Rawabi's 5th Neighborhood "Ikshaf" Takes Shape: New Floorplans, Sizes and Breathtaking Views Available

Rawabi's apartment homes are selling as quickly as we can build them! We are thrilled to announce that due to high demand, construction has begun on our 5th neighborhood, "Ikshaf", an ancient Canaanite word for "magic" or "enchantment". Indeed, there is a sense of magic in watching Rawabi's beautiful buildings spring forth from the Palestinian hillsides.

Ikshaf is situated on the northwestern side of the city. Some of its building balconies overlook the city's central park, the "green spine" that connects every neighborhood in the city to Q Center via a series of footpaths and sidewalks. Other views include recreation areas and open land, while others face inward to the city, giving the homes views of city life by day and a lit cityscape by night. The neighborhood also boasts green central commons bounded by its buildings, creating a visual sense of space from every vantage point.

Homes Sized to Meet Every Family's Needs

Ikshaf's 483 apartments range in size from 60 to 200 square meters, from cozy one-bedrooms to larger three-bedroom homes suited to families in need of more space. Some buyers are purchasing side-by-side units and configuring them as very large flats with large salons and multiple bedrooms. It's also possible to join units on two floors into a home with an internal staircase for even more living options.

Recreation Areas for both Children and Adults

One of the great features of Ikshaf is the common central courtyard; an enclosed green space from which parents can observe children at play either from its benches or from an apartment balcony. In addition to new playground equipment for the children, also available in the park are safe and accessible outdoor fitness apparatuses, allowing parents a light work-out while watching their kids.

Distinguished Design Features

Ikshaf's exquisite design details make its interiors and exteriors shine. Wide French doors flood the home with natural light, optimizing views and air flow. Cantilevered balconies create a sense of spaciousness and allow residents to enjoy the landscape and city views from multiple vantage points. Several floor plans feature ground floor terraces and private entrances. Buildings are constructed from Rawabi's distinctive multi-hued limestone, particularly beautiful during sunrise and sunset. Facades feature intricate stonework detail as a testament to the city's Palestinian heritage.

With so many layouts and design options to choose from, once the new residents of Ikshaf arrive home, they will surely find few reasons to leave.

International Women's Day Marked with Special Event for Massar Female Employees

International Women's Day was celebrated at Rawabi with a day-long outing for the hundreds of women employed by the Massar International Group. As a gesture of appreciation for the contributions made daily by the female work force, lunch, dancing, singing and hours of excitement at Rawabi Extreme were on order.

Saja Al-Akhras, Rawabi engineer stated, "I feel so special being part of this company, where we are appreciated for our achievements and abilities and not held back in any way by our gender."

Rasha Bazbaz, software engineer at Asal Technologies, added: "Efficiency is not a gender-based issue. Male and female staff should be assessed strictly on their competency and achievement; this is exactly how I feel I am treated at Asal."

Rania Zakak of the human resources division at Wassel expressed pride in her team and the part she plays in helping her team work to the best of its ability. Zakak pointed out that hundreds of women work in the companies of Massar and that the fact they are appreciated was seen in the day's events.

Massar Chairman Bashar Masri greeted the women of the group and praised their significant contributions through the years, and the leadership roles they have taken on. He noted that the group had grown to included more than 30 companies and had become a significant force in the Palestinian national economy. He also noted that the role of women is equivalent to that of men in the workplace and that this fact must be reflected in equal pay for equal work.

Massar International is a holding company that owns and operates a network of more than 30 Palestinian companies. It was founded by the businessman Masri in 1994 to promote economic development in Palestine through private sector initiatives.

Wake Forest Professors Lecture at Rawabi

A delegation of faculty professors and lecturers from Wake Forest University visited Rawabi to present a seminar entitled “Prosperity and Welfare: Past, Present and Future.” The delegation included Randal Rogan, Professor and Associate Dean of Communications, James Otteson, Professor of Economics, and Adam Hyde, Economics Expert and Assistant Director of the Eudaimonia Institute. The event was held at Cinema Hall in Q Center.

Professor Otteson remarked, “The city of Rawabi embodies the spirit of the Greek word “Eudaimonia”, which means “to flourish” or “to thrive”. When a population thrives, the common welfare is improved, prosperity follows, and our ability as human beings to stretch the limits of our potential is expanded. Rawabi proves that nothing is impossible in the face of human energy.”

Professor Rogan added that once a city like Rawabi is observed to have reached a state of eudaimonia, it is logical to seek to study the effects of this thriving population on areas around it. He also commented that he found it surprising to find an example of eudaimonia in the Middle East.

Dr. Hyde affirmed his impression of Rawabi as a city or a space which creates the preconditions for hope, which in turn encourages social change and positive advancement. All members of the Wake Forest delegation agreed that strengthened cooperation and preparation for more in-depth study were next steps.

Bashar Masri, founder of the city, welcomed the visit of the Wake Forest delegation and expressed his belief that Rawabi’s strong network of supporters from academia have been instrumental in the city’s success. Looking ahead, he affirmed Rawabi will serve as a model for similar endeavors in Palestine and hopefully marks the beginning of a new era in which all Palestinians will flourish.

Forbes Holds its Annual Conference at Rawabi

Leading US business journal Forbes Magazine annually identifies “30 Under 30”, thirty young professionals notable in industry and public service. In order to meet these global influencers, Forbes hosts regional forums where experiences, success stories and challenges are shared – and the leaders of tomorrow are often found.

This year, Forbes again hosted a discussion forum comprised of 80 young professionals, with more than 40 participants from Palestine. The event was held at Rawabi Tech Hub in Q Center.

Four Palestinian companies were selected to present their business models. Company representatives shared their successes as well as obstacles they still face.

“Imagry” specializes in AI (artificial intelligence) vehicle guidance systems. Director of Software Engineering Mohammad Abu Qare presented Imagry’s software applications for driverless vehicles in Palestine and abroad. Abu Qare noted that Imagry utilized “Connect”, the co-working and innovation space at Rawabi Tech Hub, and also conducted extensive vehicle testing on road on the wider, safer streets of Rawabi.

“Red Crow” CEO Hussein Nasser Al-Deen presented his firm’s data analysis tools, which collects general user information based on geo-location from various social media platforms to help alert populations to situations of danger and instability, whether related to weather, natural disaster or social unrest.

CEO of “Gamiphy” Ous Nabulsi presented the interactive marketing tools his company developed to allow small businesses to target market segments with pinpoint precision.

“WebTeb” is an online platform connecting doctors and patients in the virtual world. Lina Al-Omari described the company’s growth trajectory, from its early days at Connect in the Rawabi Tech Hub to today, where it is collaborating with Harvard University in the collection of medical data.

Zack O'Malley Greenburg, Senior Editor of Forbes, was present at the Rawabi event. He announced that one of the presenting Palestinian companies had been selected to advance to the next forum being held in Amsterdam later this year. Greenberg also expressed appreciation for the efforts of the participants as well as the support received from Rawabi Tech Hub.

Seri Taha from Rawabi Tech Hub thanked Greenberg and Forbes for choosing Rawabi as the venue for its 30 Under 30 event. He stated, "As technology leaders in Palestine, we seek to connect young, creative innovators with their peers from around the world. Our goal is not only knowledge exchange, but also to demonstrate that here at Rawabi, we are making technological advances in leaps and bounds."

Rawabi founder Bashar Masri added that Rawabi Tech Hub was established to help local companies better compete in the global marketplace. "One thing this conference unequivocally confirms is that Palestinian enterprise is completely capable of producing world class software and technology products", he said. "We expect the exposure gained for our companies in this forum will lead to more joint ventures and help us to expand to regional markets."

PCF Chairman Bashar Masri stressed that the organization is dedicated to building skill among chess enthusiasts all over Palestine. He pointed to Palestinians participation in the Arab World and international championships as notable achievements and an indication of more success to come.

Palestinian Chess Players Take Gold and Silver Medals in Arab World Youth Chess Championship

Chess enthusiasts Mohammad Sider and Raji Sayyel made history as the first Palestinians to win first and second place in the Arab World Chess Championships in the youth division. Sider ranked first overall in his age category and Sayyel took second place in his group.

PCF expressed its pride in the achievements of both players. This competition is considered one of the most difficult in the region, so the wins of the 2 aspiring masters were particularly exciting.

Spring at Rawabi Brings a New Season of Fun and Adventure

It seemed this year as though all the flowers at Rawabi opened up overnight, encouraged by the gentle rains of winter and the quickly warming days. Children spilled out into the playgrounds after school as the days grew longer, and once the clocks were changed, games and laughter continued longer and longer into the evening. Q Center, too, came alive with shoppers and diners, eager to spend time out of doors after the winter months.

To celebrate this season of renewal, Rawabi hosted a children's Easter Egg Hunt, with more than 400 eggs stashed in different locations throughout Q Center. Each egg was pre-marked with a number, and the number corresponded to a prize for each of Rawabi's young egg seekers.

Hundreds of friends, children and families roamed Q Center during the hunt, and time flew by. Just before the activity ended, a surprise "flash sale" was announced at participating Q Center stores as an added bonus for parents in attendance. Bargains galore, clowns, costumed cartoon characters and face painting rounded out the day's activity. As the weather continues to warm up, so will the roster of fun leisure activities available for all ages throughout Rawabi. Come enjoy our sales, dining attractions, hiking trails, party venues and much more - it's all waiting for you at Rawabi!

Cuisine, Couture and Clowns: Rawabi and the French Institute of Jerusalem Host Events Blending French and Palestinian Culture

Cross-cultural outreach is an important element of the Rawabi Foundation mission. Despite its rich history, delicious cuisine and international outlook, Palestine's global image is often a victim of negative headlines. Building bridges between peoples is even more important in such an adverse political climate. To that end, the Rawabi Foundation organized a week's worth of events in cooperation with the French Institute of Jerusalem to keep the spirit of our shared humanity strong.

French Culinary Week in Rawabi

Rawabi's Siroter Café ("to sip" in French) hosted two days of events with renowned French chefs, Kevin Rieu and Joris Maurer on the occasion of Palestine's fourth annual French Culinary Week. Chef Rieu prepared a typical, tasty French supper in the café's open kitchen format. Chef Maurer explored the art of French cheese-making, where guests sampled six different types of cheeses and learned to pair cheeses with other meal elements.

Fashion Week

Rawabi is hosting an exciting year-long fashion competition for aspiring Palestinian and French apparel designers. Participants will be in residence for 2 weeks during 3 months of the year during 2018: April, July and December. At year's end, an exhibition showcasing their innovative design work will be held at Rawabi.

All designers are given living accommodations, workspace and a stipend during their in-residence period at Rawabi. The collaborative effort will highlight local design talent, provide exposure to global design trends and create demand for quality apparel. Many international fashion houses have based flagship operations for Palestine at Rawabi's Q Center retail shopping district.

Clowns Without Borders

Clowns Without Borders joins together humanitarian activists from around the world to provide moral and emotional support to traumatized populations. Visiting entertainers brought smiles and laughter to young audiences in camps throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip during their tour.

Throughout the week, eight different groups of clowns, comedians and musicians stopped in to tour Rawabi. CWB's visits to Rawabi helped to promote awareness of its global humanitarian mission in Palestine.

New Restaurant Options Round Out the Menu at Q Center

Joining the lineup of Q Center dining destinations such as French-inspired "Siroter" and coffee bar "Shishapresso", Rawabi is pleased to announce the addition of a number of new eateries. Those in need of quick sustenance can grab shawarma, falafel, hummus and ful at "Shrak", or head over to "Q-Burger" for a juicy, tasty burger cooked to perfection. Palestinian savory pastries, Italian pizza and pasta are all found on Lilac's menu, while all varieties of sandwiches can be had at "3alsaree".

Delicious Desserts at Artoos, Chocolate Shop and Kanafanji

And coming soon... Refreshing Juices and Fruit Cocktails at "Juicebangbang"

After lunch or after dinner strolls are always best when they feature a stop for a delicious treat. Artoos, Chocolate Shop and Kanafanji each feature different types of delicious sweet delicacies depending on the mood of the moment, including ice cream, Nutella crepes, waffles or hot and bubbly traditional Palestinian kunafa.

Coming soon to Q Center is Jordanian brand "Juicebangbang", offering iced coffee, tea and fresh fruit smoothies and bubble juice cocktails for a thirst-quenching respite on a hot summer day.

Various Sport Activities for Rawabi Residents and Employees

In an environment of fun and entertainment, Rawabi sought to increase the interaction and collaboration of its residents on one hand, and the employees of the companies at Q Center on the other, through sporting events and recreational activities. In cooperation with “Palestine: Sports for Life”, weekly soccer matches and basketball training camps were organized for children of different ages and skill levels on the city’s playgrounds. Coaches worked with the children on game rules, game skills, and also the values of good sportsmanship. Resident children of Rawabi also teamed up with students of the Rawabi English Academy for beginner chess trainings, taught by two Rawabi engineers who played competitive chess at the university level. Every participant received a graduation certificate upon completion of the course.

Additionally, an exciting multi-player, multi-level table tennis tournament was put together by employees of the companies based in Q Center. Teams were created by random drawing from player pools. Then, employees from different companies were matched up to compete in the tournament.

Rawabi places high emphasis on leisure activities that focus on sports and enjoying the outdoors. Such activities are key to the quality of life in the city.

Public Safety and Fire Department Certifies and Graduates Rawabi's Volunteer First Responders

As is common in many cities throughout the world, fire and public safety departments recruit volunteer first responders. First responders are residents of the city who undergo rigorous training in emergency first aid and crisis management. These local volunteers are often first on the scene when trouble strikes; helping to clear the area, provide initial assistance to the injured and direct activity at the scene. Training and certification for Rawabi first responders is conducted in coordination with the Ramallah and Al-Bireh Civil Defense Directorates. Graduates complete a detailed lecture series and receive hands-on training dealing with gas leaks, safe evacuation of building residents in the event of fire or earthquake, even rope-rappelling to reach victims on high floors who may be fearful or confused in an emergency. March 1 is marked as World Civil Defense Day. This year, Rawabi's Municipal Council and the Civil Defense leadership honored the first class of community responders in a ceremony that included live demonstrations of the skills volunteers learned in their training. Rawabi Mayor Ibrahim Al-Natour expressed his appreciation for the efforts of the Ramallah and Al-Bireh Civil Defense Directorate in helping the new city establish appropriate protocols for public safety and for their guidance in training the city's new volunteers. Mayor Al-Natour stressed the high level of coordination among Ramallah, Al-Bireh and Rawabi responders and their consistent approach to international standards for public safety.

Colonel Ma'moun Al-Amour, head of the Ramallah and Al-Bireh Civil Defense Directorate, stated that the demanding training program thoroughly prepares volunteers to perform in emergency situations. He also lauded the spirit of community and common welfare evident at Rawabi with so many applicants volunteering for emergency response training.

Every graduate received a certificate of completion of the training signed by the head of the Civil Defense Directorate and the city's mayor. Rawabi founder Bashar Masri thanked the responders for their participation. "These dedicated volunteers bring their preparedness training with them; embracing the responsibility whenever and wherever they may be called upon to serve," Masri said.

Archbishop Atallah Hanna: "Rawabi's Olive Trees Embody its Palestinian Identity"

Atallah Hanna, Archbishop of Sebastia from Jerusalem's Greek Orthodox Patriarchate, recently paid a visit to the city of Rawabi, touring its municipal services infrastructure, neighborhoods and entertainment complex.

Archbishop Hanna observed "Rawabi reflects Palestinian ingenuity - the creativity of those who planned it, designed its structures and facilities, established it and work tirelessly here... the spirit of innovation and originality here is a source of pride for Palestinians everywhere."

The archbishop added, "The beautiful olive trees of Rawabi immediately caught my attention. These trees embody this advanced and modern city's distinctly Palestinian identity. Rawabi's presence on this land protects it from confiscation by occupation forces, and is thus a statement of peaceful resistance."

Visiting the cornerstone of Rawabi's first church, Archbishop Hanna also affirmed that the presence of a church site in Rawabi speaks to the unyielding unity of all Palestinians, regardless of faith.

The archbishop presided over a symposium entitled "Jerusalem - Between Trump's Decision and the Imposition of Taxes" at Cinema Hall in Q Center. He stressed that Islamic and Christian unity in Jerusalem is the best way for Palestinians to defend their rights.

The symposium drew large numbers of young people who posed many thoughtful questions about the current political situation in Jerusalem and the long-term outlook for Palestinians living there. Hanna answered each question at length, resulting in a lively, thought-provoking discussion.

Rawabi founder Bashar Masri was on hand to greet the archbishop and to welcome him warmly to the city. Masri in his remarks made clear that Palestinians of all faiths call Rawabi home and that freedom of religious practice is a central tenet of the city's community. He drew parallels between Rawabi's challenges and those of Jerusalem, emphasizing the need for Palestinians to remain steadfast in the face of those obstacles.

Rawabi and Dartmouth College's Tuck School of Business Engage in Joint Projects

Tuck Business School at Dartmouth College has devoted a semester-long course in real estate investment to the study of the city of Rawabi. City founder Bashar Masri was invited to visit Dartmouth and to address the students taking the course, as well as to weigh in on some of their conclusions.

Rawabi and Tuck have cooperated in several areas of joint academic interest for the past 4 years. Tuck professors lead training courses in the context of the Massarak Training Initiative on topics such as pricing, management and human resources. During Masri's visit, students presented him with analysis and conclusions of various proposals, ideas and challenges. Masri helped the students by offering information, facts and figures for them to factor into their analyses.

The final lecture included a discussion of the strengths and weaknesses of the Rawabi project, many of which have already been identified but also including some perspectives that have not yet been considered. Masri also discussed the impact of the current political situation with the Tuck students and how it continues to insert a degree of uncertainty in the project's financial forecasting. He used the examples of the delay in the needed approvals for access roads and water as factors that added considerably to the project's costs and threatened its viability for a time.

Another topic was the role of government in large scale real estate projects like Rawabi. Masri maintained that governments have neither the budgets nor the expertise to launch projects of Rawabi's size. It is the duty of the private sector, he maintained, to take on both the risk and reward. Masri also discussed how important it was to the city to have a young and vital work force with a high percentage of women. Bold, forward-looking projects are generally suited to the creative, risk-taking spirit more commonly found in a younger demographic.

Job creation for Palestinians was one of the most important outcomes of the project, in Masri's view, as much as the most obvious outcome of new housing stock. Many Palestinians who had been forced to find work in Israel were able to find employment at home in Palestine, another intangible benefit that resulted from the endeavor.

Looking ahead, as Rawabi's new central retail shopping district gathers steam, students are turning to creation of an e-commerce web site featuring all the shops in Rawabi's Q Center. With no history of e-commerce in Palestine, this is a value-added exercise from which Rawabi stands to potentially benefit a great deal.

Rawabi and Tuck will work together to explore this potentially fruitful new area of cooperation and to seek more areas to engage in the future.

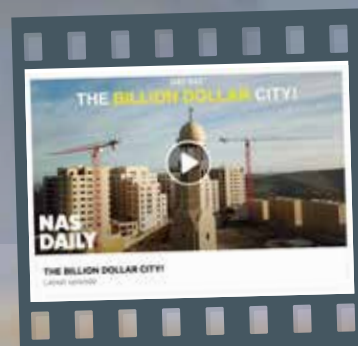

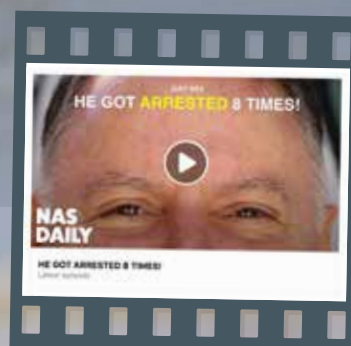

Nuseir Yassin of “Nas Daily” Fame Makes 3 Short Films About Rawabi

Nuseir Yassin is a Palestinian from the Galilee famous on Facebook and the internet for his “Nas Daily” shorts chronicling people, places and events he finds noteworthy for their ability to inspire, uplift or remind us of our shared humanity. “Nas” for non-speakers of Arabic simply means “people”. He has more than 6 million followers on Facebook.

Yassin recently came to Rawabi and created three of his 1-minute videos about the city. He describes the city as “madness” in the most positive sense – mad in its audacity, its boldness, the size and number of obstacles it faces and still perseveres.

The three films approach the city from 3 vantage points – one features the city’s story, facilities and attractions, the second the city’s founder Bashar Masri, and the third, Yassin’s own recently purchased apartment at Rawabi. Like all his Nas Daily shorts, the films are funny, engaging and leave viewers a little happier for having seen them.
